

DAHLIA days

Ashton Gardens at Thanksgiving Point

September 27 - 28 • 9 am - 8 pm

Welcome to DAHLIA days

The dramatic, bold flowers of dahlias that grace the late summer and autumn gardens are not to be missed!

This weekend, see what dahlia devotees around the world adore about this genus of flowers that has such spectacular diversity. Gorgeous cultivars range from feathery blooms as big as a child's head to tiny pom-pom flowers of circular perfection. Some formal, some splashy, these vibrant blooms come in every color imaginable. Their unfurling petals are wonderful in the garden, and dahlias are spectacular as cut flowers.

1. The Dahlia genus has 42 species, 15 standard forms, thousands of varieties, and more are being bred around the world every year. In Ashton Gardens we have a few thousand plants of 60 different varieties.
2. Dahlias are not hardy here in northern Utah and the tubers must be dug and stored in a cool place indoors during the winter. The tubers can then be replanted outdoors the following spring.
3. Dahlia tubers must have a body, neck, and eyes. If one of these is missing, the tuber is not viable and will not grow.
4. Dahlias are tuberous plants from the high mountains of Mexico & Guatemala. The Aztecs called them cocoxchitl and images of the flowers are found in Aztec art.
5. Dahlia tubers were sent to Spain from Central America by Spanish explorers about 1785. In Europe the genus was named Dahlia in honor of Dr. Anders Dahl, a pupil of the botanist Linnaeus.
6. Dahlias were viewed as too boisterous for the formal beds of upper-class gardens throughout much of the 1800s and 1900s. Dahlias have always been embraced by the working classes.

Dahlias are classified into different forms based on their shape, size, and structure. The most common dahlia forms are called:
